ABOUT THE GLOVES CHARITY & AMIR KHAN:

Gloves Community Centre was the idea of Amir Khan, who personally invested £700,000 into the building of the centre which provides youngsters with a place to train and to learn all aspects of the sport from technique to media management. Amir began boxing competitively at the age of 11, with early honours' including three English school titles, three junior ABA titles and gold at the 2003 Junior Olympics. In early 2004 he won a gold medal at the European Student Championships in Lithuania, and in South Korea several months later he won World Junior Lightweight title after fighting five times in seven days. Khan then rose to fame as Britain's sole representative in boxing at the 2004 Athens Olympics, winning a silver medal at the age of 17. He was Britain's youngest Olympic boxer since Colin Jones in 1976. The Gloves Community Centre provides a fully equipped boxing, health fitness complex, situated in the town centre of Bolton, Lancashire.
